The American Cancer Society recommends that women with average risk aged 40 to 44 years should have the choice to start breast cancer screening once a year with mammography if they wish to do so. The risks of screening as well as the potential benefits should be considered. Women aged 45 to 49 years should be screened with mammography annually. Women aged 50 to 54 years should be screened with mammography annually. For women aged 55 years and older, screening with mammography is recommended once every two years or once a year.
